

UC Davis will host a Symposium about the future of California's olive oil industry

UC Davis (California, USA) will host next January 17th a Symposium about the future of California's olive oil industry.

Top industry and academic experts will examine market trends, reveal new research and discuss the gains made by the newly established Olive Oil Commission of California.

The symposium also will review the best practices that growers and processors have employed to maximize their profitability.

The tentative topics will be Market overview, CA and World; Grove establishment options; Irrigation and fertigation; Pest and disease control; Pruning/harvesting; How growers can get more profit out of the grove; and How processing variables influence yield and quality.

Presented by the commission and the UC Davis Olive Center, this is a must-attend event for growers, processors, and anyone interested in the future of California's olive oil industry.
