

European Commission launches new tool to strengthen EU's fight against IUU fishing

In the continued efforts to fight illegal, unreported and unregulated fishery (IUU) globally, Karmenu Vella, Commissioner for Environment, Maritime Affairs and Fisheries, will launch the EU's first IT tool, called "CATCH", conceived to streamline the checks of seafood products entering the EU market.

The launch will take place at the Seafood Expo today at 15:00 (European Commission stand: Hall 7 – 1411).

Commissioner Vella said: "The EU is a global leader in the fight against illegal fishing. Access to the EU – the world's biggest seafood market - is an important asset in convincing governments and exporters around the world to respect the rules protecting against illegal, unreported and unregulated fishery fishing. With the CATCH initiative, we are making it easier to control that only illegal, unreported and unregulated fishery-free products enter our market. We are making it simpler to take care of our ocean and our consumers."

The catch certification scheme was established to protect the EU market against products stemming from illegal fishing. Certificates are required for each consignment of fishery products entering the EU territory, ensuring that fishery products from third countries come from legal sources. CATCH will digitalise the current paper-based certification scheme. CATCH will support Member States in their illegal, unreported and unregulated fishery-related verification tasks and help reduce the risk of fraud, facilitate the trade flows, and reduce the burden on operators and administrations.

Liens articles :

<https://fis.com/fis/worldnews/worldnews.asp?l=e&id=102758&ndb=1>

<https://www.seafoodsource.com/news/supply-trade/eu-launches-catch-software-to-reduce-chance-of-iuu-products-entering-market>

<https://www.lemarin.fr/secteurs-activites/peche/34182-catch-leurope-passe-aux-certificats-de-capture-en-ligne>

