

Mandarin trade and policy in Chile

The USDA post in Santiago indicates fresh fruit importers regard Chilean citrus as high quality, but the volume that Chile exports is not enough to fulfill export demand.

The marketing season for Chilean mandarin ranges between May and October each year, which provides a window of export opportunities during the northern hemisphere counter-season. Chilean mandarin exports to the world have increased by 200 percent since 2014.

Chile exported 56,040 tons of mandarins in 2014 and 170,230 tons in 2018. The top destination for Chilean mandarin exports is the United States. In fact, in 2018, 96 percent of the Chilean mandarin exports went to the United States, totaling 163,287 tons and $176.3 million.

In 2019, Chilean mandarin exports decreased by 17 percent (January to October data). Exports to the United States decreased by 18 percent. By contrast, exports to the United Kingdom (UK) and the Netherlands increased in 2019, however exports to those two market destinations still represent less than two percent of the total export volume.

Rapport complet :

https://agfstorage.blob.core.windows.net/misc/FP_com/2019/12/20/Chil600.pdf

Lien article :

<https://www.freshplaza.com/article/9175268/mandarin-trade-and-policy-in-chile/>

